The one example I know of that is not normal is using a data type that is a subtype of another data type. Am I right in thinking that all normalization is done implicitly when learning databases? A: Yes, it seems your view of data normalization is pretty much correct. The only reason to have data types that are subtypes of each other is to introduce constraints on the data, so that the database can enforce rules like "all purchases must have a store". But in practice in most cases you would be able to implement these constraints as integrity constraints on the database. Arthur George Whitfield Sir Arthur George Whitfield (16 October 1883 – 11 April 1965) was a British civil servant and diplomat. He was born in Nottingham, the second son of Sir Arthur Whitfield, who was made a baronet in 1885. He was educated at Lancing College, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated with a B.A. in 1906 and with first class honours in Literae Humaniores. He was admitted a Fellow of Brasenose College in 1907. He also graduated with an M.A. in History in 1906 and in 1923 earned his Ph.D. in history, also from Brasenose College. He was a Fellow at Brasenose College from 1903 to 1907 and from 1923 to 1927. He was principal of St Catharine's College, Cambridge from 1910 to 1915, and then secretary of the newly created National Liberal Club in 1916, becoming principal of the club in 1919. In 1921, he became private secretary to George Augustus Sala, who was then serving as British Ambassador to Spain and as Minister for Artistic Entertainment during the First World War. From 1921 to 1925 he was assistant private secretary in the Foreign Office, and from 1925 to 1928 he was Private Secretary to Austen Chamberlain. In 1928, he became principal private secretary to Sir Samuel Hoare, then the Secretary of State for
